

Glen Finch

- Executive coach and social housing specialist
- My core values: excellence, enthusiasm and making a difference
- Clients find me: inspiring, supportive, reliable and understanding
- Favourite pastime: coaching junior football and cricket teams

I have spent three decades working in the social housing sector, half of that time as an accomplished senior leader. My areas of expertise include: conducting business reviews, developing social enterprises and identifying innovative solutions to longstanding challenges. I have also worked with a range of small businesses, social enterprises and third sector organisations.

I have considerable experience at a senior level of managing responsive repairs, establishing internal services, development, major regeneration programmes. I have also developed social enterprises and undertaken business reviews for existing companies. I bring innovative solutions to projects.

Currently completing an Institute of Leadership and Management post-graduate level coaching qualification, I have undertaken executive coaching at C-suite level and with senior staff in social housing organisations, the third sector and small businesses.

I live in Bolton with my wife and three sons. In my spare time I coach football and am junior foundation chair and board member at my local cricket club. I also just love watching sport on TV!
